Higginbotham (Foreward), pp. lxv-lxvi: He began by identifying the problem that the majority of white Americans believe 'that they personally have nothing whatsoever to do with slavery, segregation, or racial oppression because neither they—nor as far as they know—their ancestors ever enslaved anyone, ever burned a cross in the night in front of anyone's house, or ever denied anyone a seat at the front of the bus.' This 'self-absolving denial,' Leon maintained, 'made it nearly impossible to have an honest discussion about what used to be called "the Negro Problem.'" In Leon's view, this explains why it is so difficult to remove racial oppression from our society even though de jure segregation and discrimination have been eliminated in the law. b. Wikerson, pp. 15-17: America is an old house... Ignorance is no protection from the consequences of inaction. . . . Many people may rightly say, 'I had nothing to do with how this all started. I have nothing to do with the sins of the past. My ancestors never attacked indigenous people, never owned slaves.' And yes. Not one of us was here when this house was built. . . . [B]ut they are ours to deal with now. And any further deterioration is, in fact, on our hands. . . . America has an unseen skeleton, a caste system that is as central to its operation as are the studs and joists that we cannot see in the physical buildings we call home." c. p. 19: "Caste and race are neither synonymous nor mutually exclusive. . . . Caste is fixed and rigid. Race is fluid and superficial, subject to periodic redefinition to meet the needs of the dominant caste in what is now the United States." d. p. 25: "When we speak of the race problem in America . . . what we really mean is the caste system and the
