As artificial intelligence reshapes the legal landscape, the profession faces urgent questions about ethics, education, and the foundations of academic integrity. Legal Research and Writing in the Age of AI: Ethics, Pedagogy, and Practice will explore these challenges through three in-depth panels examining the ethical use of AI in legal practice, the transformation of legal research and writing instruction, and the growing concerns around plagiarism and academic honesty in an AI-driven era. Together, these discussions will highlight the responsibilities of practicing lawyers, students, and educators as they adapt to rapidly developing technologies. This all-day event will bring together members of the judiciary, scholars, practitioners, and other members of the legal community to navigate these emerging issues and to chart a thoughtful, responsible path forward for the profession.
